Ad Content Creation

Three creatives designed for Feed, Stories and Reels

Feed

Stories

Reels

Primary text: "Need a pick-me-up? ☕ Stop by Bean & Bloom today and get 20% off your first handcrafted iced coffee."

Headline: "20% Off Your First Iced Coffee" CTA: Learn More

Ad format preference: Image ads were chosen over video or carousel. Static images let the offer be understood at a glance, need no video production, and suit all three placements (Feed, Stories, Reels) without multiple assets per carousel card. A carousel showcasing several menu items is a good next test.

Ad Preview — Facebook & Instagram Feed

Ad preview as rendered in Meta Ads Manager

Square creative renders cleanly in Feed on both platforms. Full primary text, image, headline and CTA button are all visible — the strongest placement for this creative's layout.

Ad Preview — Instagram & Facebook Stories

Vertical creative fills the Story frame well. Only a truncated line of primary text shows above the CTA — most of the message is carried by the image itself here.

Ad Preview — Reels

The bold Reels creative stands out, but its own text sits close to the bottom where Meta's UI (caption, action buttons) can overlap it — a safe-zone issue worth correcting in a live campaign.

Observation: Advantage+ Creative (AI Image Generation)

An unplanned but useful learning point

Advantage+ creative
Image generation

Multi-advertiser ads
Off

- Advantage+ Creative (Image generation) was on by default, so Meta auto-generated background variations of the original design.
- Some preview variants replaced the original cafe-table background with a different AI-generated scene, changing the visual tone from what was actually designed.
- Key takeaway: this setting should be reviewed and disabled when brand consistency matters, since it can alter creative without an explicit prompt.

Reflection & Key Learnings

Insights from building the campaign, not from live performance data

- Meta's Estimated Audience Size (8.4M–9.8M) made clear how much reach targeting choices unlock — broad interests widen delivery but reduce precision.
- Writing tight ad copy within character limits took more iteration than expected, especially for the headline.
- Highest-volume bidding is the easiest starting point for a beginner, but a live campaign would benefit from testing cost-cap bidding once baseline data exists.
- Creative consistency matters: the three ad designs used different fonts and color palettes, and Advantage+ Creative altered the image further — both are worth tightening in a real campaign.
- Without an actual ad spend history, it isn't possible to validate real CTR or cost-per-result — a genuine limitation of a practice-only, unpublished setup.

Recommendations for a Future Live Campaign

Where this practice campaign could go next

- Run a small live budget test (₹300–500/day for 5–7 days) to gather real CTR and cost-per-click data before scaling.
- A/B test two ad creatives (e.g. interior shot vs. product close-up) to see which drives more engagement.
- Standardize font and color palette across all creatives, and review Advantage+ Creative output before publishing.
- Fix the Reels creative's text placement so it clears Meta's on-screen UI safe zones.
- Use Meta Pixel (if a real website exists) to track link clicks and conversions more precisely.
- Retarget people who engaged with the Page or previewed the ad, with a follow-up offer.
